McEvoy's Get in the Game at the Kistler Center

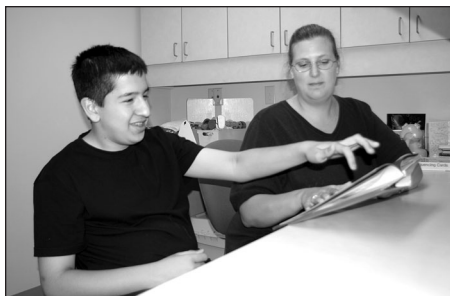

by Donna Payne

Life is a game filled with give and take and everyone wins at the Kistler Center. Andrew McEvoy entered the game at age 4 when he was diagnosed with autism. His dad, Gerry, the manager at Sutherlands, jumped in six years ago as a member of the Kistler Center Advisory Board. They have different roles to play but both have home-field advantage. The Fort Smith facility is the only one of its kind specializing in pediatric occupational, physical, and speech therapy in this region.

Occupational therapists and speech-language pathologists have worked with Andrew several times a week since he was 4. He can tell you what he wants, think fast enough while playing a board game to know what he needs to roll, beat the pants off of you at Scrabble and replace the road map on an out-of-town trip.

"He can remember every turn and every exit number," said Gerry. Although that comes in handy, that type of skill is what makes communication with people so difficult. "He's so focused on the details, he's not looking at what's in the foreground," Gerry said.

Shirley and Gerry McEvoy have four children: Maureen, 26, who works at Sparks Regional Medical Center;

Speech-Language Pathologist, Kristy Gordon, helps Andrew increase his vocabulary by identifying pictures in a book.

Kathryn, 22, a Bost employee who is headed to medical school; Gerry Jr., 17, a football player at Southside High School; and Andrew, a seventh-grader at Ramsey Junior High.

Gerry is originally from Dublin, Ireland, and came to Arkansas to run track for the University of Arkansas. That's where he met and married Shirley, also an Arkansas student. Gerry has worked on and off for Sutherlands since 1982. He joined the Kistler Center Board of Directors in 2002 and has been Board president for the past three years.

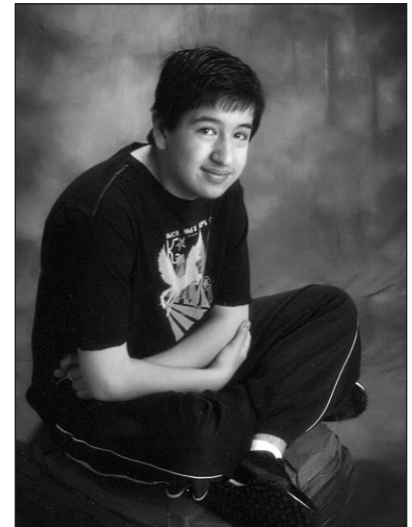

Andrew was born in 1994 while the McEvoy's were living in San Diego, Calif. Like many autistic children, Andrew's early months were quite typical.

"We have a library of videos and you can see how interactive Andrew is. Then two to three months later, on the next video, it's gone. He's rocking, staring, not responding to his name," Gerry recalls. "We had no indication anything was wrong until he was about a year-and-a-half old".

Andrew's regression concerned his parents but at that time, there were very few resources for parents to educate themselves.

"The pediatrician never brought it (autism) up," Gerry said. Instead, they were told Andrew was slow to progress because of all the things his siblings did for him.

According to the Autism Speaks website, 1 in 150 individuals is diagnosed with autism and it is four times more likely to strike boys than girls. Autism impairs a person's ability to communicate and relate to others. It is also associated with rigid routines and repetitive behaviors, such as obsessively arranging objects or following very specific routines. Symptoms can range from very mild to quite severe.

Autism spectrum disorders usually can be reliably diagnosed by age 3, although new research is pushing back the age of the diagnosis to as early as 6 months. Research indicates that intervention can result in significant improvements for many young children.

In 1996, the family returned to Fort Smith. With the help of their new pediatrician and strong recommendations from other parents, the McEvoy family became a part of the Kistler family.

Initially, the McEvoy's were impressed with the physical layout of the Center and all it had to offer. But before long, they began to realize the heart and soul of the Kistler Center.

"The greatest part of the Kistler Center is the staff, the services they can provide locally are so impressive," Gerry said. "If a child needs multiple visits per week, they don't have to go out of town. They have such a high standard and make sure every child receives services".

Among other activities, Gerry participates in quarterly meetings with the Kistler Center Board of Directors and receives reports on the operation of the Center, finances, communications and a total rundown from the executive director Jennifer Kistler. "We have a great leader in Jennifer," Gerry said. "She addresses every detail of running the Center with such energy. She does it all." But for all the Kistler Center does, he knows there is more to do and that the Center is up to the task. "There is a latent need in our community of children who don't receive services because their parents don't know about the Kistler Center," Gerry said.

And as long as there is a child who needs to "get in the game," the Kistler Center will welcome them to the team.

Andrew works on following complex directions using time, location, and sequencing concepts with the help of (left) Lynn Bain, Occupational Therapist and Crystal Stenback, Speech-Language Pathologist.

Thank you for your support!

Betty and Wayne Kistler's 6-year-old son was struck by a car in 1962, which resulted in a severe head injury that would eventually take his life. They were faced with the task of traveling hundreds, sometimes thousands, of miles to find medical treatment for Gregory. Gregory's condition improved to the point he was able to attend school, enjoy fishing trips, and take walks. But in his teen years that improvement began to slip away and he died in 1979. His memory lives on through the Center.

Five years before Gregory's death, Betty and Wayne had the anticipation of a new grandchild. Their youngest daughter, Jennifer, gave birth to Michelle in 1974. Unfortunately, their anticipated joy was mixed with pain. Michelle was born with spina bifida, more commonly known as open spine. Michelle enjoyed life and never complained. She maintained a cheerful disposition and strove to accomplish many milestones: she graduated from high school, learned to drive a specially adapted van, and worked successfully at a part-time job while committing much of her time volunteering to help others. Sadly, Michelle died from complications of a bone infection in 2003.

What was born out of one family's need, 30 years ago, has grown to become an outpatient treatment center known throughout the region as the premier pediatric facility. Center staff have earned a reputation throughout the region for their compassionate professionalism and personal commitment to providing the highest quality care, not only to the children, but to the entire family. Parents, grandparents, siblings, and other caregivers are included in treatment when appropriate to facilitate continuity of care in all settings.

The children who receive physical therapy, occupational therapy, and speech-language therapy at The Gregory Kistler Treatment Center span a wide range of diagnoses and needs. Some children need assistance with the basics of daily living, such as feeding and sitting up, while others may have problems with balance and coordination. The child's diagnosis and individual needs determine the frequency and duration of treatment; most receive therapy regularly for a period of months to several years. Over 500 children currently benefit from our services, while more than 4,000 children and families have received help at the Center since its beginning.

At the Kistler Center, a child is never turned away due to the financial circumstances of his or her family. All that is required for a child to benefit from treatment at the Center is a referral from their physician. The Gregory Kistler Treatment Center is the only facility of its kind specializing in pediatric occupational therapy, physical therapy, speech-language therapy, aquatic therapy, and augmentative and alternative communication in this region.

an effective and meaningful community initiative and who contributes to the quality of life in the Fort Smith region.

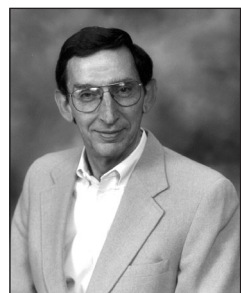

Honorable Jim Spears made the announcement at the award ceremony stating, "Kistler's leadership has given the community and the area access to quality care provided by a variety of professionals for physically and mentally challenged children."

Jennifer is a registered nurse, an advocate for children and families, and is a member of the Association of

Fundraising Professionals, Arkansas Volunteer Coordinators Association, Roundtable Alliance, and Leave A Legacy Arkansas. The Michelle Kistler Memorial Endowment Fund

In loving memory of Michelle Kistler, the Board of Directors of The Gregory Kistler Treatment Center For Children, Inc., has established an Endowment Fund. This endowment, through its earnings, will be used to help fund needed therapy to more of our special children so the Board of Directors can continue the philosophy of never turning a child away for financial reasons. Additionally, as the Kistler Center's Board directs, some earnings may be directed to operational activities to sustain and grow the Kistler Center's ability to provide the most up-to-date occupational therapy, physical therapy, and/or speech-language therapy possible for children. Contributions may be made as a single gift or spread over several years.

Kids Helping Kids!

Emily Brooks, Cook Elementary Student Council President, presents a $500 donation to the Kistler Center's Development Coordinator, Kathie Smith, on May 30, 2007. The student council raised approximately $14,000 and donated to several area children's charities.

One Size Fits All

Have you been searching for just the right gift? One with special meaning? Then consider making a donation to the Kistler Center in honor of a friend or family member. That "gift" will not only mean a lot to the recipient, but it will also mean continued care for children in need.

Have You Considered An IRA Gift?

If you are looking for a special way to give to your favorite charity, the Pension Protection Act of 2006 (PPA) may be just the answer. The IRA charitable rollover provisions provided by the PPA are in effect until the end of this year.

The advantages of giving IRA assets before the close of 2007 are:

- Those age 70 1/2 or older who make charitable gifts directly from their traditional or Roth IRA can do so tax-free.
- Donors may give all or a portion of their mandatory IRA withdrawals up to $100,000 this year.
- Donors over 70 1/2 who are not able to itemize their tax deductions can give directly from their IRA and achieve the same benefits as if their gift was fully deductible.
- Donors over age 70 1/2 who are receiving Social Security income may make gifts directly from their IRA without increasing their adjusted gross income and possibly subjecting their Social Security income to higher levels of taxation.
- Those whose retirement assets are in other plans, such as a 401(K), may be able to transfer assets to an IRA and then make their charitable gifts.

Don't miss your chance to reap these tax advantages and help your favorite charity at the same time. These IRA provisions are currently set to expire by the end of 2007. Contact your financial advisor for complete details.
